Many Moscow Jews Got Matzoh Despite Soviet Ban; Some Were Indifferent

[redacted] Moscow revealed [redacted] He expressed little interest in the matzoh problem and asserted that [redacted] per cent of the 2,500,000 Soviet Jews [redacted] the same. Mr. [redacted] said he had read in a foreign Yiddish newspaper that a Moscow rabbi and lay officials of the Jewish congregation had given assurances that matzohs would be available for all who wanted them.

Chief Rabbi Yehuda Leib Levin of Moscow's Centrally Synagogue, announced in mid-March that Government authorities had promised to supply matzohs for the coming Passover. The congregation's lay president, Naum S. Fuller, said that "enough matzohs would be available through private and communal baking to supply 50,000 Jews in the Moscow area.

At the Synagogue several elderly men were passing the time of day chatting, says the New York Times, while the building was being scrubbed and polished for the first night's services of the festival commemorating the Israelites' exodus from Egypt.

"I have a separate apartment with an oven. We baked our own matzohs," said one man in answer to an inquiry. "I have a friend in Georgia and he sends me a package each year," said another, adding, "Those Georgians, you know, make their own laws." A third, admitting he had not been able to obtain matzohs, said: "I personally can get along without it, but I wish I had some to show to my children to keep up the traditions."

A spirit[illegible] [illegible] this year. He called up the bakery administration and said he wished they would supply matzohs and kulich because he was lagging behind in the sales plan and could use the extra business. But the answer was 'No'."

Talk at the synagogue got around to the arrest of matzoh peddlers on charges of profiteering. "The Government ban simply invites crime," one man said. "If the stores would freely sell matzohs, no one would be tempted into speculating with it."

In Cherkisovo, a northeast suburb of Moscow that has a substantial Jewish population, a quick tour of food stores disclosed a large number of last-minute shoppers making purchases for the Seder, the family feast during which the Passover story of the exodus is traditionally retold.

It was difficult to determine what percentage of Moscow's 250,000 Jews planned to have a Seder with all the trimmings, says the New York Times, how many would observe the holiday for tradition's sake with a festive table, and how many were not even aware that the night began one of the most important Jewish holidays.

300 Christian Children Attend Interfaith Seder

The children of the Stephen Wise Free Synagogue, in New York, held their annual interfaith [illegible] to demonstrate the [illegible] to their [illegible] [illegible] of table manners, [illegible] [illegible] from three Protestant churches and a Children's Aid [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] with [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] observance of Passover began, says the New York Times. For the Christians, the meal was a romp through the strange and delightful ritual marking the deliverance of the Israelites from bondage in ancient Egypt.

They followed the ceremony in simplified Haggadahs, the traditional guidebooks that tell the Passover story and detail the eating of the ritual foods. They nibbled matzoh, warily at first, but with more zeal when the unleavened bread was spread sandwich-fashion with the sweet apple and nut mixture called "haroset".

They only pecked at the parsley dipped in salt water that reminds Jews of the bitterness of slavery; but their appetites returned when the time came for the hardboiled eggs, ritual suggestions of eternal life. And they had no difficulty in quaffing the four cups of grape juice, marking God's four Biblical promises to free the Israelites.

Throughout the meal, children of the synagogue rose from their tables to intone the traditional prayers in Hebrew and to explain them in English. Before the ceremony ended, the non-Jewish guests had picked up some of the refrains and joined in singing the Hebrew.

The annual interfaith Seder is held in the synagogue auditorium at 30 West 68th Street. Guests came from the Presbyterian Church of the Master, 360 West 122d Street; the Good Shepherd-Faith Presbyterian Church, 152 West 66th Street; the Unitarian Church of All Souls, 30th Street and Lexington Avenue; and the Dunlevy Milbank Center of the

Over 20,000 View One-Man Show Of Jewish Sculptor

More than 20,000 persons have visited the retrospective exhibition at the University of California at Los Angeles to see works by Jacques Lipchitz. This is said to be the largest attendance for a one-man show of sculpture in California.

The exhibition includes 115 examples of the varied career of Mr. Lipchitz that have covered about half a century, says the New York Times. Realism, symbolism, and abstraction are all illustrated in this selection from the sculptor's by the 71-year-old artist. The show also contains some of his lithographs and drawings.

The exhibition will go on a cross-country tour that is expected to last about a year and a half. The works will be shown in San Francisco, Denver, Fort Worth, Des Moines, [illegible] [illegible].

The [illegible] arranged by the U.C.L.A. Art Council, a volunteer self-supporting group. The president of the council is Mrs. Harry [illegible], and the chairman of the exhibition is Mrs. Sidney F. Brody.

The exhibition [illegible] $40,000 to [illegible], according to Mrs. Brody. [illegible] [illegible] the entire proceeds from the [illegible] exhibition at the Council will permit art students to study works they might not see ordinarily.

This aspect has been demonstrated at the exhibition where many young artists sketch the pieces, ignoring the milling crowds. Students from any school are admitted free. Others pay 50 cents.

Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Dubow, 5201 Cote St. Luc Road, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Shirley Dubow, to Steven Delman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Delman, of New York. The marriage will take place on August 4, at the Sheraton Mount-Royal Hotel.

Tarzan: A Short Story

BY LEWIS MANN, OF THE JEWISH RECORDER

"Tarzan" came from Spain or Morocco or some such place; it was never very clear. He had left, fled, to keep from going into the army. On that point he was definite, vocal, in his argot mixture of English, Hebrew, French, Spanish, and Arabic. "Me no go army. Tsava no good," shaking his finger at you and looking very solemn.

He didn't like mending nets. Where he came from, mending nets was skilled work and rated big pay. The kibbutz didn't pay anything at all. Nets, no. Big money, fix nets. Kibbutz no money, kibbutz tphoosy — and he would spit.

In the morning we would ride out to the fish ponds on a wagon pulled by a tractor. It would be cold, six o'clock in the morning, the sun just beginning to break up the damp cover of night mist, the mountains of Syria and Lebanon still barely visible, snow-capped Hermon hardly seen.

Tarzan would be peeling an orange with his knife, concentrating on eating it, like a monkey, peering around and stuffing sections into his seamed and weather-lined face, the juice running out at the corners of his mouth. The oranges were good and big and sweet. We all ate them until we were sick.

It was a long ride to the ponds. Mostly we would sit there, quietly absorbed in ourselves, perhaps the memories of our sleep, our dreams; eating oranges, smoking a morning cigarette, perhaps talking, but quietly, low voices murmuring one to the other beneath the cough and rumble of the tractor, as though afraid to break the night's spell and be faced with the necessity of starting a new day.

Sometimes Tarzan would sing, starting out in a soft voice, some plaintive, mourning Berber tune, to be joined by Jules, the Tunisian boy, and perhaps André, the Moroccan. For a time they would sing together, mourning the night, weaving a silent sad spell over us all, over the morning and the rising sun and the mountains in the distance.

Then Tarzan would break the spell. It was always he who broke it, as if the sadness and the longing were too much for him to stand.

"Shalom", he would cry. "Shalom, Vulya!" Vulya was our boss. The head of the fish ponds, a silent, stern Rumanian who spoke little, laughed little and seemed constantly absorbed with the problem of putting salve on his always burnt and chapped, almost parboiled, lips. But Tarzan could make Vulya laugh; if not laugh, at least smile; even when he had just done something terrible, like driving the tractor through our supply shack and pushing half of the stores, along with the tractor into the ditch. Even while Vulya cursed and railed at him, he would be smiling, the smile crinkling the corners of his chapped lips.

"Such a one," he would say sometimes, "look at him, such a one. He knows nothing from nothing, he's only happy."

And he was happy, Tarzan. At least he seemed to be. When the sadness of the singing would be too much, he would cry for Vulya: "Shalom, Vulya! Shir chadash, new song, new song. Vulya, sing shir chadash!"

And Vulya, knowing what he wanted, starting to laugh already, would swing around from the front of the wagon where he sat thinking about the day's work, to face us. Vulya always looked solemn in his too big kova tembel flopping down over his ears, and the sun glinting off the lenses of his ridiculous glasses with pale-pink rims.

"Nu, tov, shir chadash" — and Tarzan would clap his hands together gleefully like a child. Then Vulya would raise his hands like a choir leader, and all together we would be off, crashing through "She'll be Comin' Round the Mountain" set to ludicrous Hebrew and English words: Hu tavo b'li p'jama, hu tavo.

By the time we'd get to the ponds we'd all be laughing and shouting, trying to outdo each other with new verses to the song; and Vulya would sit, smiling slightly like a happy grandmother watching the antics of her children's children.

Before breakfast there were chores to do: spread food in the ponds, gather the nets that had been spread to dry the day before, each of us working separately or at most by twos at some little job that had to be gotten out of the way, until the sun was up for sure and the last remnants of mist and cold had been burned away beneath the stark blue sky.

Breakfast was a ritual. In our narrow — open at both ends — tin shed, seated around a rickety table on long wooden benches, each man beating his two eggs in a dented and wobbling tin bowl spearing hunks of bread and spreading the cheese with the same knives; and then passing the bowl to Vulya, each of us in turn, and waiting while Vulya solemnly fried and turned the eggs in the same tin bowls over the heat of a kerosene stove, a p'tiliyah; eggs, black olives, white cheese, black bread, and hot tea already sweetened in a huge pot by Jules the Tunisian; peeling oranges with pocket knives. There was an old milk can filled with water and as we finished we rinsed our plates and cups and hung them up in the rafters beneath the low, tin roof.

Vulya was always out first. While we finished our cigarettes, he stood outside: he had already changed into his fishing shorts. Reflectively rubbing the grizzled hair on his chest, thinking of tens of fishes yet to be netted and handed from hand to hand in heavy iron buckets to be dumped into the tank.

Or maybe the smile came from the antics of Tarzan, hopping first on one foot then on the other as he changed from khaki pants to baggy, mud-crusted shorts, and then his care as he pulled his shirt over his head, not to mess up the carefully combed curly black hair; and then the, oh, so careful putting on of his green alpine hat with the white feather.

Just so, just in the right place. The hat nagged at and worried until it was sitting perfectly and, just to make sure, a little run, then a quick jump and a tumble, springing up in front of Vulya, touching the brim of the hat again, to make sure it really hadn't moved.

And then, Tarzan, slapping his hands — Shalom Vulya! Work, work, daggim, fishes! And a roguish grin as he tilted the hat forward and stalked off a la Humphrey Bogart, hunching his shoulders and sneering.

Tuesday night was movie night. The tables in the dining-hall would be stacked out of the way, the benches and chairs arranged in rows, and the film shown on two large bed sheets stitched together and stretched between boards.

Tarzan liked the movies. He kept us entertained all day long with his antics: mimicking the actors, spending hours at a time walking like some actor, aping his voice, his speech, a rapid shotgun fire of mixed languages streaming from his mouth, not saying anything, not making sense, but sounding remarkably like whoever it was he was imitating.

Tarzan watched, thought of his childhood in Rumania, the cheder, the pogroms; or there was a wife and a beautiful Sabra daughter here on the kibbutz to be thought about, the pleasure of that thought and of his neat, two-room dwelling in shikun vatikim, calling up that ghost of a smile on his round, salve-whitened lips.

The films were usually old and American. For those who didn't understand English, seeing them was a bit of a chore. The subtitles were run in a vertical column on the right side of the screen. They were in Hebrew, French, and Arabic and, because of space limitations, were usually one or two scenes behind the picture itself. Consequently, there was always a great deal of babble and confusion during and after the movie, especially after, when the non-English-speaking would join with the English-speaking and everyone would try to sort out the picture, the disparity between titles and action.

Tarzan was always very big in these post-mortems. He didn't understand the English and had only the barest reading ability in French and Arabic and none at all in Hebrew, yet he would be right in the center of the discussion, animatedly explaining what had happened, acting out all of the parts, chattering away in his mixture of tongues.

Somehow, uncannily, he always understood what had happened: better, perhaps, than those of us who knew English. Maybe because he concentrated so fiercely on everything that was going on on the screen. To him, the movies were not just an hour or two of relaxation. They were what gave color and spice to his whole life. The Tuesday night movie was the big event in his week.

He believed in his movies. For him, what took place [illegible] was real life. Everything else was make-believe the movies were reality. He couldn't understand if one of us missed the movie. Wednesdays he would spend the whole day reliving the movie, playing all the parts for us, stopping to make lengthy explanations for the benefit of anyone who had been so unfortunate as to miss it. If the movie had been a musical, he could [illegible] his own words and beating out the rhythm on a pair of spoons or the top of a tin can. He could do all the dances to perfection, too.

On movie nights, if you looked carefully you could see the make-up of the kibbutz settlement. Theoretically, the kibbutz is the most completely democratic institution in the world; from each according to his ability, to each according to his need. No favoritism, no discrimination. It almost worked that way, too.

When an individual wished to join the kibbutz, he first had to [illegible]

TARZAN: A SHORT STORY

Kibbutz made up its mind about him and he made his mind up about the kibbutz. Then his application was voted on by the members and he was accepted or rejected. Usually, most candidates were accepted. Able-bodied workers were at a premium.

Once accepted, in most kibbutzim the seniority system prevails. The longer you are a member, the more your personal conveniences increase: better housing, better furniture, going up the ladder until you reach "shikun vatikim," the rows of deluxe apartments reserved for those with the most seniority, the veterans, usually the founders of the kibbutz. Each year additional units are added until eventually, the hope is, everyone will be living in "shikun vatikim."

Everything else, though, was distributed fairly evenly: food from the communal dining-hall, clothing from the storehouse, the same education for all the children, vacation time and so on. On the whole, the system works fairly well. The only place where it breaks down is on what is ideologically the most important level, and that is socially.

The kibbutz is made up of a variety of different groups. Older settlers from Eastern Europe, perhaps the Anglo-Saxon countries; their children, those old enough to be members of the kibbutz; and newcomers, mainly from the Arabic countries: Morocco, Tunisia, Yemen, and some English-speaking but dark-skinned people from Burma and India.

Although we worked together in the fish ponds, after work we all found groups of our own. We rarely saw each other unless it was a big communal event, a marriage or a bar mitzvah, and, of course, at the movies. Even then we didn't sit together. We said hello and talked for a while but when the movie was about to begin, we'd drift apart, each group separated still by national boundaries or perhaps by the centuries-old difference in our backgrounds.

Separate, except for one strange pairing which began accidentally on one of the movie nights and for some reason continued every Tuesday night — Tarzan and Vulya's sixteen-year-old daughter, Batya. They were a strange couple indeed. Tarzan must have been at least thirty years old. Still hard and strong, of course, his arms bulging with muscles beneath the rolled-up sleeves of his flannel shirt, but ugly, an almost grotesque face of lines and knobs and bumps, and one long scar running along his cheek clear down to his chin.

There was something fierce about him for all of his antics. Fierce and dangerous and savage, like a great bear dancing to a gypsy's violin, shackled and chained, looking harmless as he shuffles from foot to foot, but all the while mean and very dangerous.

Batya was young and fresh: long, soft blonde hair, pink cheeks, and blue eyes. A little girl still. A little girl who clapped her hands with glee at Tarzan's cavorting. A little girl who giggled and blushed when he took to bringing her a bunch of flowers every Tuesday night and presented them to her with a deep flourishing bow, reminiscent of some swashbuckling movie he had seen.

Vulya should have known, perhaps. It's hard to say. It was really an appealing sight, the tamed brute paying mock court to the pink-cheeked peasant princess. A grown man and a little girl. So Vulya just laughed and in his somewhat coarse way pointed the sight out to his friends for them to see and laugh at too.

The only thing Vulya forgot was that he was no longer in Eastern Europe, and a girl of sixteen in the kibbutz, although in a great many ways she may look and act like a girl of sixteen in Rumania, is in many other ways a very different person. A much older person and a much more sophisticated young lady.

For a time, though, nothing happened. Tarzan seemed very happy. He played more than ever, hardly working at all, dancing around, wandering off to pick flowers, singing privately to himself. Jules, the Tunisian, listened to the Arabic words Tarzan would sing and shook his head, clicking his tongue. "Lo tov," he said, "no good."

Affection is seldom displayed openly in the kibbutz. For some reason it is frowned on. Married couples would occasionally be caught holding hands in public, but never single people. Never, that is, except when they wanted it to be known that they were serious about each other and were contemplating marriage. Then they would make it a point to be seen going into the dining-hall for the evening meal, hand in hand.

Vulya wasn't there when Tarzan and Batya held hands; she with flowers in her hair, he dressed in his best white shirt, the green alpine hat cocked jauntily on his head. No one said anything to them and, as the custom is, they were left alone to sit at a table by themselves so the point would be made clear to the entire community.

But news travels fast in a kibbutz and by the next morning as we rode out to work, it was evident that Vulya knew what happened. He sat in his usual place in the front of the wagon with his back to us, but this morning there was no singing, no talking. Vulya's back was like a barricade, a stone wall between us and the warmth of the rising sun.

He worked us like slaves all that day and the next; never smiling, his face dark and stern, gloomy like the grey clouds of the rainy months. Things might have worked out yet if Tarzan had understood, but he didn't; he was only perplexed. He couldn't understand Vulya's anger. In his country an unmarried daughter of sixteen was already an old maid, a liability. Most fathers would be happy to have such a daughter off their hands, taken care of.

At first, Tarzan tried to make up to Vulya, fawning on him, performing for him, trying to make him laugh. Vulya merely spit and turned his back. Then Tarzan grew sullen, hurt. He became vicious and threw rocks at Yitschak, the one-eyed wagon driver, who brought our lunch to us every day.

For two whole days we worked in gloomy silence, draining ponds that didn't need to be drained, dragging nets full of fish and then pouring them back into the pond. Sweating under the merciless blue sky and the burning, glaring sun. And all the time Vulya's hoarse voice rode us, snapping at us like a gravel-toned whip, raising welts on our backs and sullen murder in our hearts. M'soch, M'soh, pull, pull the nets you lazy, worthless sons of dogs, pull, pull!

Until, finally, toward the end of the second day Tarzan could take no more. We had drained a pond and pulled in a huge net of fish. They were small ones for counting and weighing. We passed bucketsful up to the scales where

HAYIM GREENBERG, THE LEADERS' LEADER

By A. J. Brown

The funeral services for Hayim Greenberg ten years ago were remarkable in several respects:

They took place in one of the largest, and wealthiest, synagogues in New York, the Emat Jeshurun, though the deceased was neither a synagogue-goer nor a man of means.

The main funeral oration was pronounced not by the Rabbi of the Congregation (Dr. Israel Goldstein) but by Rabbi Robert Gordis, who is known to be a leading scholar and theologian of the Conservative movement. Dr. Gordis in his address referred to the deceased as "Rabbi Hayim Greenberg."

The writer of these lines, in the many years he knew Greenberg, never heard him addressed or referred to in that way. Greenberg was usually addressed as "Chaver Greenberg" (Comrade) by the Labor Zionists whose leader he was, or plain "Greenberg", or sometimes semi-facetiously and affectionately as "Reb Hayim". On occasion, strangers, in deference to his scholarship, addressed him as "Dr. Greenberg".

The plain fact was that Greenberg was neither an ordained rabbi nor a Ph.D., although he was so steeped in Jewish scholarship and in Judaism as to be able to teach, or at least guide, many of the leading rabbis of America, and did, in his younger days, teach at Russian universities.

The simple traditional service for which the deceased asked in his will was varied by only one detail: Sidor Belarsky, a well-known singer, sang in a Yiddish translation from the Russian, Lermontov's famous poem, "As I walk out alone on the road."

This, too, was in accordance with the will in which the deceased had requested that "if a suitable singer is available" this song of Lermontov be added to selections from Psalms 103, 23, and Chapter 28 of the Book of Job, "in the original (Hebrew) in Yiddish or in English", because that Russian song "used to be my wife's and my own favorite in our childhood." The will, incidentally, was written in Hebrew.

"I hope there will be no speeches at my funeral", the will states. But there was at least one, by Dr. Gordis. The singing of the Lermontov song in Yiddish rather than in the original Russian was a compromise.

Greenberg was an unusual man, likely to surprise, and even shock, his friends, in life as in death. But he was universally respected, even by his most pronounced opponents, and many ideas and actions which were unpalatable to them during his lifetime have now become accepted and seen as proper. Thus it was discovered that the Lermontov song contained lines about the immortality of the soul, a subject which always interested Greenberg, who, while intensely Jewish in his loyalties, was a seeker of truth, beauty, the moral order in the world, and above all, of the living God in the cultural heritage of all mankind.

We began by saying that Greenberg, the leader of a secularist, non-synagogue movement in Jewish life, was buried by such religious leaders as Dr. Goldstein and Dr. Gordis. It may be added that among the men who paid and are paying tribute to Greenberg's memory immediately after his death ten years ago and today, are other prominent rabbis, such as Morris Adler, of Detroit; Jay Kaufman, and Ira Eisenstein, of New York; Jacob Weinstein, of Chicago; Charles Shulman, of New York; Arthur Hertzberg, of Englewood, N. J., and many others of all three currents in American Judaism, Reform, Conservative, and Orthodox.

Hayim Greenberg was born in a village in Bessarabia, then under Russian rule, a province in which the peasants spoke a dialect of Rumanian; the officials and most non-Jews in town spoke Russian; and the Jews spoke Yiddish, and occasionally Russian. Greenberg belonged to that minority of Jews who were native to Russia then in Yiddish.

Nearly all Jews in Bessarabia had some knowledge of Hebrew, and there was a substantial minority which cultivated Hebrew as a spoken language. Hayim Greenberg was one of them. He had little formal education either in Russian or in Hebrew, but he was a diligent student, a voracious reader, and a gifted linguist.

When, as a boy of about fifteen, he went to Odessa he attracted wide attention as a prodigy who used both the Russian and the Hebrew languages as a virtuoso musician does his musical instrument, and by his remarkable erudition and gifts of oratory. He became the protege of the great Hebrew poet, Bialik; of the famous Zionist leader, Ussishkin; and of other important leaders who lived in Odessa at the time, shortly before, during, and immediately following World War I.

Needless to say, Greenberg was a Zionist from his early youth. He joined a group called "Zeire-Zion" (roughly, "Young-Zionists") who advocated immigration to Palestine of young people to build up the land through manual labor. This group did not favor the emphasis on class struggle which then characterized the Poale Zion ("Workers of Zion" or "Labor Zionists.").

The Zeire Zion, on the whole, were not religious, certainly very few of them were observant, but they were not as adamantly secularist as the Poale Zion were in those days. These facts are mentioned here in order to throw light on Greenberg's subsequent career, especially in the United States, as a Labor Zionist leader who was, informally at least, a religious teacher, recognized as such by leading rabbis.

To continue with biographical facts: During World War I the Zionist movement and the movement for the revival of Hebrew as a living language gained much ground among the Jews of the Russian Empire. In some sections, especially in the Ukraine and in Bessarabia it became the majority movement. Greenberg became the general secretary of "Tarbuth" ("Culture"), an organization which promoted the Hebrew cultural revival through a network of elementary and secondary schools in which all subjects were taught in Hebrew.

But, when the Bolsheviks took over control of the country, they banned the use of Hebrew and prescribed only Yiddish for Jews. The one exception they permitted for a short few years was the existence of the Hebrew Theatre, "Habimah", in Moscow. Greenberg was the author of the memorandum, signed, among others, by Maxim Gorki, which influenced the Soviet authorities in favor of Habimah.

After teaching in the University of Kharkov for a short period, Greenberg left Russia and settled in Berlin. There he amazed everyone by his command of the German language in writing and in speaking. He was made associate editor of two of the foremost Hebrew publications of that day, and continued as general secretary of "Tarbuth" whose centre for a while was to be in Berlin.

In 1924 he arrived in the United States on a mission for "Tarbuth" which failed, and settled here to live until the day of his death. He was made editor of the Zeire-Zion Yiddish publication, "Farn Folk" ("For the people") and began his career as a writer and lecturer in the Yiddish language. Soon he became one of the great masters of that language, combining with the rich idiomatic expressions of Yiddish, the scientific precision and philosophical terminology which the language then lacked.

Several years later, when the Zeire-Zion and Poale Zion merged into one party, Greenberg was elected to become the editor of the party organ in Yiddish, "Der Yiddisher Kemfer" (The Jewish Militant). He held this position to the end of his life. Incidentally, the merger of the two parties in America followed a similar merger of corresponding parties in Palestine into one party since known as "Mapai." Greenberg thus became one of the world figures in Mapai, with Ben-Gurion and Sharett.

they were weighed and then passed back down again to be dumped back into the pond.

Tarzan was doing the heavy work. He and Jules carried the buckets up the slippery, muddy slope to the scale. The bucket was heavy and the mud was slimy. Tarzan slipped and fish spilled out upon the mud, writhing and squirming and gasping for breath. Jules made a dive to save the bucket and to start gathering up the spilled fish. Tarzan just stood there, defeated, his shoulders slumping.

Vulya started to curse in Rumanian and Yiddish. All of his painfully acquired Hebrew was gone. He screamed at Tarzan until his face was beet red, the veins on his neck standing out. Tarzan didn't understand the words. He didn't have to. What Vulya was saying was obvious. Tarzan started toward him, fists clenched, his face cold, but Jules stepped in between and held them off, pushing Tarzan away, motioning for him to leave.

Tarzan turned and started to walk off, but then he stopped and turned back. He walked to where the fish still lay squirming on the ground, and very slowly at first, and then more rapidly, began to stamp them to death, stamping on the poor little writhing bodies with his hard horny heels, crushing them into the mud, mashing and breaking them, until the ground and his feet were covered and spattered with red blood and mud, broken and dying fish clinging to his ankles in little bloody bits and pieces. Then he walked off, not looking back, growling softly in his throat.

We went back to work and in silence finished counting the fish.

They came for Tarzan in the morning. Two policemen in khaki uniforms and a jeep. Tarzan must have let Vulya hit him for a long time before he finally turned on him. Tarzan's face was a red mass of bruises, both eyes closed and his nose broken. He was very quiet and sat in the back of the jeep handcuffed to the policeman, with his head bent forward, his hands folded in his lap. No one said goodbye. The jeep just drove away and began to get smaller and smaller in the dust of the dirt road. Once, Batya reached out her hand as if to call him back. "David," she murmured. It was only later that I realized that I had never known his name.

In the distance we could hear the old men saying kaddish, the prayer for the dead.

This story is from the Jewish Frontier.

Reverend Father Henri Gagnon, Director of Diocese Social Services of Montreal, and personal representative of His Eminence Cardinal Paul Emile Leger, will be guest speaker at the annual meeting of the Jewish Immigrant Aid Services of Canada (HIAS), April 22, at 2:30 P.M., at the Windsor Hotel, in Montreal, held with graduation exercises of the JIAS Citizenship School which conducts bilingual classes in French, English, and citizenship. George Hellinger will receive the JIAS Award of Honour for his contribution to immigrant welfare in Canada. He is the honorary president of JIAS; and the immediate past president of Temple Emanu-El. Alderman Philip Falser, president, will preside. Dr. Joseph Kage, national executive director, will discuss immigration trends.

before it opened. He made no changes.

Among the important art shows brought by the Art Council during its ten years were the collection of Spanish masters and a selection of famous French artists of the rococo and romantic styles.

One method used by the Council to raise funds is to hold a "thieves' market" sale once every two years. More than $70,000 was raised from the sale last year.

The Council, in addition to arranging the exhibitions, gives two awards of $2,500 to graduate students and has a fund, of $1,500 for needy students, says the New York Times. It also has a $2,000 traveling award in art history and assists in the acquisition of works for the University's art gallery.

Children's Aid Society, 32 West 18th Street.

The Rev. Dr. Edward E. Klein, rabbi of the synagogue, told the young Christian guests they might be puzzled by parts of the ceremony. "But it is differences that makes us interesting, that make America a great tapestry," he said, reports the New York Times. "This Jewish festival of freedom," he said, "is the type of festival that really unites us."

CLASS IN COOKERY

BOILED LAKE TROUT

two or three pounds of trout — two onions salt to taste — pinch of white pepper

Boil fish with sliced onions, salt, and pepper in enough water to cover fish. Cook about thirty minutes.

Sauce

two eggs — three tablespoons sugar
juice of two lemons

Beat eggs, add sugar and lemon juice. Pour off liquid from fish and mix into egg mixture. Pour back over the fish and cook for five minutes over low heat, until sauce is slightly thickened, and lemon-coloured. Serve hot.

Mrs. J. Burman,
26 De Quincy Boulevard, Toronto.

APPLE CAKE

six medium-sized apples — two eggs one cup sugar — one-half cup oil one teaspoon vanilla — one heaping teaspoon of baking powder one and one-quarter cups flour — one-eighth teaspoon salt.

Cream beaten eggs and sugar. Add oil, then flour, baking powder, and salt which have been sifted together three times. Add vanilla. Have ready peeled apples sliced thin. In a slightly-greased, eight-by-eight-inch baking pan, spread sliced apples. Sprinkle with cinnamon and sugar. Repeat until apples are used up. Cover with batter. Bake at 350 degrees for thirty-five minutes.

Freedom Stronger Than In Past, Says Kennedy In Passover Message To Labor Israel

President Kennedy said that although "tyranny walks abroad," freedom was stronger than in the past. In a Passover message, the President said that history had shown to be realities things that men had sought for centuries — "the dignity of mind and expression, the attainment of economic security without the loss of individual integrity."

The President wrote: "For many, the world seems to have little changed in the thousands of years of man's hoping and man's suffering. Tyranny walks abroad, and there is fear on the doorsteps of many houses. Yet this much has changed. Freedom has greater strength than in the past.

"And the conditions toward which men have aspired for centuries — the dignity of mind and expression, the attainment of economic security without the loss of individual integrity — have been historically demonstrated as realities. It is well for free men everywhere to taste again of the suffering of the past through memory and celebration, for this makes present conviction firmer. A stern heritage is a good teacher.

"Confident that nothing of man's travail is lost, that the moment of trial is necessary to the moment of victory, and that our path leads out from the City of Man to that of God, the alliance of free men will persevere. In that spirit and finally, I offer my good wishes," says the New York Times. As part of the meeting six memorial candles were kindled in honor of six million Jews who died under the Hitler nation.

No matter what simcha you're about to celebrate, Mazel Tov, is a wine uniquely appropriate to the occasion.

Mazel Tov, made from Concord grapes, is a wine that fulfils, in the glass, the sweet rich promise of its name. Here is a wine welcomed everywhere, by everybody because it's a wine guests 'remember'.

Mazel Tov, made 'Kosher l'Pesach' under strict rabbinical supervision, is available throughout the year for every simcha.

NEW YORKERS SUMMONED BY MAYOR FOR 20th ANNIVERSARY OF WARSAW GHETTO UPRISING

The population of New York was urged by Mayor Robert F. Wagner to join in the observance of the 20th anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising, in which close to 60,000 Jews, men, women and children comprising the entire population of the beleaguered ghetto, were massacred by Nazi armored might.

The call was contained in a proclamation issued by the Mayor from City Hall and presented to a delegation of the Zionist Organization of America. In the absence of Mayor Wagner, the proclamation was presented by Deputy Mayor Edward F. Cavanaugh, Jr., at a City Hall ceremony attended by Judge Albert D. Schanzer, vice-president of the Zionist Organization of America, and chairman of its special events; Moses Torczyner, president of the Manhattan Region; Dr. Sidney Marks, national secretary; Abram Salomon, chairman of the Manhattan Zionist Region for special events.

In an address at the City Hall ceremony, Mr. Torczyner emphasized the significance of this anniversary in that it demonstrates that human dignity and freedom will always triumph over tyranny. In his response, Deputy Mayor Cavanaugh said that the fight of the Warsaw Ghetto inmates was not in vain, and that the world now acknowledges that they fought for the liberty of all.

The commemoration of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising on a national scale was held on April 21, the day set aside in a joint resolution passed by both houses of the United States Congress and in a proclamation recently issued by President John F. Kennedy. The full text of the proclamation issued by Mayor Wagner follows:

Whereas: The 21st day of April, 1963, marks the 20th anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising; and

Whereas: The men, women and children who met death on that day, of atrocities, symbolize the indestructible spirit of liberty which throughout history has ultimately triumphed against the forces of tyranny; and

Whereas: The indomitable spirit demonstrated on that tragic day will forever be an inspiration to oppressed peoples everywhere, and will always be commemorated by the Zionist Organization of America.

Now, therefore, I, Robert F. Wagner, Mayor of the City of New York do hereby proclaim the 21st day of April, 1963, as in New York City, and do urge our citizens to draw renewed inspiration from the gallant, magnificent behavior of these heroic peoples of Warsaw 20 years ago.

W. J. C. Welcomes Khrushchev's Statement On Anti-Semitism

Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president of the World Jewish Congress, which represents Jewish communities in sixty-four lands, in a statement issued in New York, welcomed "Mr. Khrushchev's strong repudiation of anti-Semitism," contained in a letter written recently to Lord Russell, of Great Britain, as follows:

The recent statement of Chairman Nikita Khrushchev in response to Lord Russell may well prove to be a document of great importance. For the first time the head of the Soviet Government has made a considered public statement on certain important aspects of Jewish life in the Soviet Union. What is not less important, the statement was given prominence in the Soviet press, and therefore made known to the people of the Soviet Union.

Mr. Khrushchev's strong repudiation of anti-Semitism will be widely welcomed, and not by Jews alone. We are encouraged to hope that this statement may mark the beginning of a new and positive approach to the consideration of Jewish questions.

For the fundamental problems remain unchanged. Religions other than Judaism are granted the facilities to maintain national federations of congregations with common institutions to serve common purposes, and to associate with and participate in international organizations. Similarly, nationalities, however small, other than the Jewish, are encouraged to develop their own distinctive culture, and receive massive support from the authorities for this purpose.

This difference of treatment has been a cause of anxiety to Jewish communities throughout the world as well as to large bodies of international public opinion deeply committed to the promotion of closer international understanding. We address an earnest appeal to the Soviet authorities, in accordance with their own declared principle of equal treatment for all nationalities, to develop a policy in relation to Soviet Jewry which will assure for them full equality of treatment with all other religions and nationality groups.

LIFE AMONG THE PUBLISHERS

PUBLISHER OF JEWISH WESTERN BULLETIN DECLINES ANNUAL SUBSIDY

The Publisher and Editor of The Jewish Western Bulletin, Samuel Kaplan, informed the Vancouver Jewish Community Council President, William Gelmon, and Publications Chairman, Dr. John Zack, that The Bulletin no longer requires its annual communal subsidy. "The Bulletin is not completely out of the red," Mr. Kaplan stated, "but it no longer seems justifiable to me to accept the community subsidy in order to operate The Bulletin."

Announcement was made in a letter, text of which is as follows:

Mr. William Gelmon, President,
Jewish Community Council,
950 West 41st Avenue,
Vancouver 13, B.C.
Dear Mr. Gelmon:

It is with very great pleasure that I write to advise the entire community through you, their Community Council President, that I am declining the annual communal subsidy of $1,860.00 which was so generously accorded to me when I assumed publication of The Bulletin in August, 1960.

As you know, when I took over two-and-a-half years ago, this newspaper was in dark financial circumstances. Due to the enthusiastic support of this fine community and the goodwill of our advertisers in the general community, I have been able to overcome this deficit and for the first time, The Bulletin finds itself now on solvent ground.

I wish to extend my gratitude to the Community and to the Community Council, Mr. President, for the confidence you have all shown in me.

I pledge my energies anew to maintain publication of The Bulletin as a financially solvent community newspaper.

Your respectfully,
SAMUEL KAPLAN,
Publisher and Editor.

This will constitute the first time in 34 years of continuous publication that The Jewish Western Bulletin is being published without financial subvention from the Community.

[The Canadian Jewish Review is the only Jewish journal in Canada which has never received a subsidy.]

ONE WOMAN'S VIEW: SHE'S AGAINST THIS ONE

By Nancy Phillips, of the Toronto Telegram

One of the most unhappy deals that has ever been perpetrated on a group of unsuspecting homeowners in this city, is the plan to build a synagogue at Bathurst St. and Glencairn Ave.

And to forestall any accusations of anti-Semitism, may I point out that the majority of the rate-payers in this area are Jewish themselves. THESE are the people, after all, who know exactly what another synagogue means in terms of increased parking and traffic problems. THESE are the people whose voices are raised in angry protest. As well, of course, there are Gentile families who oppose it: mine for one. Why? Because we live half a block from Glencairn, an already overburdened traffic artery.

It was a Jewish neighbor, Mrs. Jack Morris, in fact, who phoned and asked me to attend a special meeting of residents and North York councillors on Thursday night.

Briefly, the story is this: the Shaarei Shomayim Congregation, finding their synagogue's present location (at St. Clair and Winona) unsuitable, decided to build a new one in a more "desirable" district. Unfortunately for those of us who live in this pleasant, tree-filled area, a number of empty lots along Glencairn and behind a Loblaw's store and parking lot on the corner of Bathurst, were available for purchase.

Without notice to any of the ratepayers concerned, the synagogue bought for $197,000 the ENTIRE BLOCK except for two lots, which, by the grace of God, are owned by the township.

And this, despite the fact that 75 per cent of the congregation does not live within walking distance of the site.

Sign Petition

It then approached the property committee to buy this township-owned land. When residents heard of the scheme — and this was the first they'd heard of it — some 500 (my husband and self included) signed a petition opposing the synagogue's proposed location and asking that it be used as a park site instead. Ward 4 Councillor Basil Hall got council to hold up the project pending further meetings with the ratepayers.

Hall also pointed out that there are about 28,000 people in this ward and only one 8-acre park.

Although both sides were represented by most capable counsel at the Thursday night meeting, some of the strongest points were made by David Feldman, a businessman who lives on Forest Wood. (The street, incidentally, which would have the proposed synagogue sitting right in its collective backyard.) Mr. Feldman said that although the spokesman for the synagogue had tried to minimize the traffic hazards it would incur, a synagogue in N. York whose congregation is of comparable size to Shaarei Shomayim (about 500 families) requires special traffic officers to handle the congestion.

Yet THIS synagogue's parking facilities are twice as large as those proposed for the new one, and unlike "dead-end" Glencairn, it's fed by several traffic arteries.

"Even THEN it's so bad," cried Mr. Feldman angrily, "that children have been knocked down. Can you imagine what it would be like on Glencairn — which is already a menace to our children?"

Serious Traffic Hazard

The most serious traffic aspect of this plan is that a synagogue is busy every night in the week. Moreover, it maintains a full time catering service. For example: Beth Tzedec received $75,000 last year for its catering concessions. Weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, meetings, youth training programs, adult education classes — apparently the list is as endless as the parking problems would be.

Meyer Gasner, chairman of the synagogue's Board of Governors, devoted his opening remarks to character testimonials to himself and his fellow-governors. He reminded us how "many edifices they'd dedicated to worship, to adult education classes and to the training of youth," and he assured us that "this new synagogue would be a magnificent edifice incorporating the best of architectural design."

(Until pressed, however, he didn't reveal that they'd gone on further than "preliminary drawings." These were reluctantly produced after 11 p.m. when the chairman decided it was too late to open a new issue.)

Then Mr. Gasner, having questioned the validity of the signatures on the petition . . . "I have no way of checking, but I suppose they're honest," pulled a pious face and sternly accused those who opposed the land-purchase of "encroaching on the honor of God." Apparently forgetting that only a few moments previously his aide had scornfully referred to the site as "having evidence of rat-infestation," he warned those present that it was "new holy land, and therefore — HANDS OFF!"

All I can say is, if the council members sell those last two lots to Mr. Gasner and Company, they'll be making the gravest mistake of their political careers.

As parents and home-owners, gentlemen, we beg you not to let it happen.

[Mr. Gasner is chairman of the Central Region of the Canadian Jewish Congress and a publisher of The Canadian Jewish News.]
